To everyone on Twitter, you were magnificent tonight. I had more contributions that I knew what to do with, so many apologies if I didn't use your particular message.

Well, that must go down as Chelsea's finest European performance. John Terry has a lot of explaining to do after getting himself sent off in the first half, and the Blues skipper will miss the final for his moment of madness. He will be joined in the stands by Ramires and Raul Meireles, who both picked up bookings tonight. But you know what? Chelsea will not care a jot about any of that. They've just made it to their second Champions League final at the expense of the world's best side. With that kind of result, all you should do is party.

That's it! Despite going a man and two goals down, Chelsea have produced an absolutely stupendous performance to grab the goals that send them to Munich. Barca have avoided a third straight defeat in a row, but it sure as hell won't feel like that.
